Short-Term Memory Loss is OK by Abby Bickel

Pass interference that wasn't there? Out of bounds that was actually inbounds? Block that was actually a charge? Offside call that upon further review was clearly not? We've all been there before. You get that feeling deep in the pit of your stomach that you really just "kicked" the call. Sometimes it comes at a critical time in a game and other times not, but there are things you can do to deal with your mistake.

Don't let your body language show it. It's easy after a missed call to allow a quick moment of disappointment to shine through. While it is easier said than done, you have to make every conscious effort to not allow the emotions to get the best of you after you have missed a call. Putting your head down, grimacing or slouching your shoulders are surefire ways to let everyone know that you agree with their disapproval of the call. Your credibility will be quickly lost.

Admit your error if the opportunity presents itself. Certainly human errors are a part of the game. Coaches make bad substitutions and players will forget the plays, so it only makes sense that officials, from time to time, will make an error in judgment. While you don't want to be apologizing multiple times a game, there are times when a missed call can be discussed and admitted with the coach if done so professionally. The coach more often than not will appreciate the honesty.

Stay positive. There is nothing like a missed call to let self-doubt begin to creep in on you. Don't let those thoughts weigh you down. It always feels and appears to be a much bigger deal than it really will end up being in the relative scheme of things. Don't forget that for every one call you get wrong, there are tens and even hundreds of others you get correct. Fans, players, coaches and even officials fail to remember that a lot of times.

Focus on the next play. Frustration often sets in pretty quickly after a missed call. You keep thinking about it. Your focus shifts from the game to that one call. Don't forget about it. Don't forget that feeling because it will propel you to work twice as hard to prevent that from happening again. However, you must force yourself to continue officiating. Don't think about the impact that call may or may not have had on the game or match. Focus on the next play and be ready to get the next call right.

There's no such thing as a make-up call. If you sense that you have really screwed up there will be a natural inclination to "make it right." You can't go making calls that aren't there for the sake of bandaging the potential wound you just created. You will greatly compromise your credibility and the integrity of the game. Attempting to create a make-up call is a slippery slope. Don't go down it.

You're not the first official to make a mistake and you certainly won't be the last. It's easy to feel alone at times in sports officiating. Don't. You are in a constant state of learning. Mistakes are a part of that learning curve.

Get better from it. You owe it to yourself and the game to always be improving. The saying is true: "If you're not ripening, you're rotting." After the game is over, take some time to analyze the play that caused you such angst. If you can get your hands on game video, even better. Why did you make an error in judgment? Were you out of position? Did you not know the rule? Those things can be easily remedied. Whatever the reason, make a note of it and use it as an instrument for pregame discussion. And do your best not to let it happen again.

Admitting you made an error is an important part of self-assessment in officiating. Some of the best officials are their own worst critics. They analyze and then over-analyze and work twice as hard to make sure they don't make the same mistake twice. Instead of looking at mistakes as death sentences to your career, see them for what they are—learning opportunities.

Note from the Commissioner:

*Congratulations to all the officials selected to work a WIAA Regional and/or State Tournament. I would also like to thank all the officials who worked throughout the winter season. Without your dedication and service, the winter season would not have been such a success. THANK YOU!

We hope to see a lot of WOA members taking advantage of the state tournament pass and the opportunity to see some of our best officials in action. It is always great for the officials to know they are being supported by their peers. If you choose to attend one of the events as a spectator, please remember to conduct yourself as if you were assigned to the tournament. Many coaches, players and fans may recognize you as being an official and will pay close attention to the way you carry yourself during the event. Each year, the WIAA and WOA staff will receive complaints centered around the behavior of some officials. Although most of the complaints are not warranted, there are some that end up resulting in further investigations by staff and the local association/board. Please do your part to be a positive role model in the stands and remember that although you may not be involved in the contest, you are still being watched.

*If you are one of the officials selected to work a regional or state tournament please remember one thing: HAVE FUN!

Todd Stordahl
WOA Commissioner
